

Embodying Anti-Racism Principles & Practices in Evaluation

Statement by Washington Evaluators Board – Effective August 2020
Updated: October 1, 2020

Washington Evaluators (WE) understands anti-racism to be an “active process of identifying and eliminating racism by changing systems, organizational structures, policies and practices and attitudes, so that power is redistributed and shared equitably.”<sup>1</sup> WE also understands that evaluation training and practice are privileges that are not exempt from systemic oppression—that oppression pervades our environments, hides beneath data, and emerges in biases. We are committed to upholding the principles and practices of anti-racism through diversity, inclusion, representation, justice, and equity in our programs, marketing, events, membership, and community engagement.

Our Commitments to Doing the Work

LISTEN: We will listen to our Black, Indigenous, People of Color (BIPOC) community members to understand their perspectives, ideas, and lived experiences in relation to diversity, equity, justice, and inclusion in evaluation.

LEARN: We will do the work—on an individual- and organizational-level—to identify our complicity in the current system and enable actions that integrate antiracist principles and practices into our personal and professional lives.

GROW: We will use our knowledge and position to advance positive contributions within the evaluation community, as a whole, that increase equity in communities of practice, principles, and policies.

SHARE: We will amplify antiracist methodologies and practices in evaluation through our website, weekly digest, social media, AEA network, and professional development opportunities.

Our Pathway Toward Progress

REFLECT

Examine how internal priorities and actions overlap with antiracism, diversity, inclusion, representation, and equity.

EVALUATE

Evaluate our principles and practices in partnership with our community.

IMPLEMENT

Intentionally and publicly integrate these practices into our programming, mission, and vision.
